

NEW YORK CLAIMS PAUL JONES'S BODY

Members of Patriotic Societies and the Public at Large All Declare It Should Find a Last Resting Place in This City.

The Evening World's suggestion that the body of John Paul Jones, just discovered in Paris, be brought to New York and interred in historic Trinity Churchyard has met with instant and widespread approval.

Not only the public at large, but officials of the various patriotic societies and persons who have made a special study of American history, all agree that New York City is the only appropriate resting place for the bones of America's first Admiral.

Apart from the fact that New York is the first and representative city of this country, and from the additional advantage that thousands of pilgrims could visit the hero's tomb here where only hundreds could view it in any other city, there is a greater and more personal appropriateness for the choice of Manhattan Island as a repository for Paul Jones's body.

Wanted to Die Here.

There can be little doubt from Jones's own letters to friends that he intended to end his days in New York and to be buried here. This was the city he loved, and around which his chief interests were settled. As already recounted in The Evening World, he prophesied a glittering future for the then infantile city at the southern end of Manhattan Island and sought to buy an estate in its suburbs, where, as he expressed it, he might pass the remainder of his life "in calm contentment and poetic ease."

His closest friends were New Yorkers, and it was in this city that he received his hard-earned reward from Congress in the form of a gold medal and a strong letter of commendation to the King of France, under whose flag Jones desired temporarily to enlist.

Only the failure to raise an expected sum of money prevented the Admiral from realizing his ideal of becoming a resident of New York's suburbs. This city was also the last spot of American soil on which he ever stood.

That the foregoing reasons form an irrefutable argument in favor of his final interment here rather than in any other American city is attested by the

POLICEMAN AND HIS WIFE MISSING

John J. Spreckley, Who Charged Mrs. Spreckley with Bigamy, Wanted to Testify Before the Grand Jury.

The police, the Grand Jury of Brooklyn and Sgt. Spreckley are all engaged in a search for Policeman John J. Spreckley, son of the sergeant. On April 13 he disappeared from the Adams Street Station-House. His wife, who was arrested on a charge of bigamy and released on bail, is also missing. The supposition is that the policeman and his wife are living together again.

Spreckley and his wife told widely diverging stories in the police court. Mrs. Spreckley said she was forced to marry him after threats in which a big pistol and a club were flourished. Spreckley denied this, claiming that the woman concealed the fact of her alleged former marriage.

Spreckley dropped out of sight soon after the arrest of his wife, whose maiden name was McSherry, and whose first husband was a Mr. Montgomery, a well-known and successful lawyer who with her sister-in-law at No. 347 Pacific street. She was to have appeared before the Brooklyn Grand Jury on Friday last, as was her husband. Neither of them could be found.

The policeman was not given a leave of absence. As he has absented himself without permission five days in succession he is liable to instant dismissal from the department. The day after he left he sent a note to Capt. Gallagher accompanied by his shield. It wrote that this should be considered as a resignation.

MASS FOR NIGHT WORKERS.

There will be an Easter morning service for night workers in the Church of St. Francis d'Assisi, in West Thirty-first street, between Sixth and Seventh avenues, at 2.30 o'clock Sunday morning. Seven high mass will be celebrated, and a special musical programme given by chorists from St. Patrick's Cathedral and other churches.

Bishop Casati, of St. Stephen's Church, will officiate at the mass, assisted by the pastor and priest of St. Francis. The musical programme will be under the direction of Organist P. J. Gulewsky.

FOUND DEAD IN BAY.

Body of Unidentified Man Picked Up Off Quarantine Station.

The body of a man about sixty years of age was picked up in the bay off Quarantine Station early to-day. It was that of a well-dressed man and had been in the water but a short time. The man is about 5 feet, 2 inches tall, had blue eyes, gray hair, beard and mustache and wore a double-breasted coat, a blue waistcoat, dark striped trousers, a dark shirt, cotton undershirt, black socks and laced shoes. The body was taken to Clifton, where an effort is being made to have it identified.
